BENEFITS OF EARNING YOUR PMP

Project Management Institute (PMI) administers several certifications for those who work in the field of project management. Their certifications are recognized around the world by many industries. While PMI offers eight certifications, the Project Management Professional (PMP) is by far the most sought-after. Many may wonder, however, if going through the time and expense to prepare for and earn your PMP is worth it. We say, Absolutely!

Now, of course we're going to say that earning your PMP is worth it! It's how we make part of our livelihood. While we are passionate about project management training around here, we're not the only ones who have discovered the opportunities that arise when receiving your PMP. Let's look at some reasons others give.

Demonstrates proficiency

Because of the rigor of the PMP exam, this certification shows that a person has the necessary skills and knowledge to effectively manage projects. Having your PMP verifies that you have studied and understand various project management theories and models and how they can be applied within any organization or industry. By using these theories and models, project managers reduce the danger that the project will fail or run over budget and schedule.

Enhances credibility

Having a PMP certification boosts the credibility of a project manager. It gives stakeholders confidence that they are working with a competent professional who can deliver successful projects. It also reflects your disciplined character of setting and achieving a goal to better yourself in the business world.

Widens career opportunities

The PMP certification is known around the globe, making it easier for project managers to find job opportunities across industries and countries. A certification can set you apart from other candidates by showing competency and success in project management activities. Plus, according to a PMI survey, those with PMI certifications earned 16% higher salaries than those who were not certified.

Improves project outcomes

The PMP certification equips project managers with a standardized set of best practices, tools, and techniques. This leads to improved project outcomes, such as on-time delivery, cost control, and quality assurance. "When more than 1/3 of their project managers are PMP certified, organizations completed more of their projects on time, on budget, and meeting original goals." While the PMP does not guarantee a project will be 100% successful, it does show that an individual understands various techniques and international best practices that can be used to run a project and reduce its potential risk of failure.

PMI estimates that through 2027, employers worldwide will need to fill about 22 million new project-oriented positions. Whether you're pursuing a new position within your company or trying to win a position elsewhere, a PMP certification can help distinguish you from other candidates.
